Dear Alex,

Well, the weekend was not a great success, looking back I feel that it has been seven years, give or take a month or so — in two months it will be eight years since my accident, — since we last saw each other, with all the ~~ing~~ intrigue, calous gossip, and back stabbing that was going on around I found it hard to adjust, at the weekend.

I realise you were not directly part of it, but those around, responsible, dragged you into it. Through no ~~for~~ fault of your own, and with no responsibility on your part you seemed to be dragged into the "web of intrigue".

We were only alone, really on Sunday, but that was so short a time for me to adjust and find my footing. Then on the way back from the pub Derek ~~to~~ comes into the picture again, — to once again confuse and upset me by his attitude.

I could find no place I could fit in. With those around I felt I was treated just as someone passing through. There
